Govt plans cyber audit as digital fault lines emerge

Review likely to assess enterprise risks after cluster of security breaches

AASHISH ARYAN
New Delhi, 22 October

The central government is likely to soon hold a high-level stocktaking review and audit meeting to assess potential damage to Indian enterprises following a series of cybersecurity incidents over the past few days, sources said.

Among the issues likely to be discussed are vulnerabilities flagged in PHP, a widely used server-side scripting language; the leak of private keys associated with web security certificates issued by eMudhra; and a week-old communication from the Indian Computer Emergency Response Team (Certe-In) warning that artificial intelligence (AI)-powered agents had reached the live networks of Indian firms, sources said.

PHP or PHP: Hypertext Pre-processor, is an open-source scripting language that has been around for over 30 years and is used to build and run websites and web applications. Content management systems and publishing platforms such as WordPress rely on PHP to deliver dynamic content. Its widespread use means that vulnerabilities in the language can potentially expose websites, applications, and servers across a range of organisations to cyberattacks.

"One major area of concern that we have noticed following all these incidents is that the cybersecurity preparedness and response of our enterprises, especially among micro, small, and medium enterprises, is very weak. Some of the credentials are stored in plain text, and most passwords have never been changed from the default that was provided at the time of installation," a senior government official told Business Standard.

Earlier this week, Certe-In issued a late-night advisory, saying that some providers

On the agenda

- Govt is likely to discuss the impact of vulnerabilities flagged in the server-side programming language PHP
- Also likely to be on the agenda is the leak of the private keys of the web security certificates issued by eMudhra
- Indian Computer Emergency Response Team (Certe-In)'s week-old communication regarding AI-powered agents reaching live networks of Indian firms also up for discussion of frontier AI models had been released to the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY) that their AI models and agents had, "during research and evaluation activity", reached the live systems of several Indian organisations. "The recorded activity involved reading business documents, including personal data and confidential material, through credentials and connection settings exposed in application configuration, public code repositories and permissive cloud services roles," Certe-In had said.

A few days later, in another advisory, Certe-In cautioned that private keys used for eMudhra's digital certificates had been generated with insufficient cryptographic randomness, leading to their compromise.

Bengaluru-based eMudhra, a licensed certifying authority, was founded in 2008 and has issued over 60 million digital certificates to date. Only a limited number of certificates worldwide issue digital certificates under the global trust framework. Web browsers use certificates issued by agencies such as eMudhra to verify the authenticity of websites and determine whether to trust them.

Late on Wednesday night, following a global outage linked to vulnerabilities discovered in PHP, Certe-In issued another advisory asking Indian companies and enterprises to install patches released to address the security flaws.

"In practical terms, attackers could potentially execute malicious code on affected systems, including the deployment of web shells, thereby gaining control over vulnerable servers. Incidents of this kind can escalate rapidly across the global cyber landscape, particularly when they involve technologies that are so widely deployed," said Sergey Lozhkin, head of Kaspersky's Research Center for the Asia-Pacific and Middle East, Turkey, and Africa regions.

Although patches have been released to address the vulnerabilities in PHP, the greater challenge is identifying and managing every instance in which the language has been used over the years, experts said. "The use of PHP is pervasive. It can sit beneath public websites, content management systems, hosting platforms and third-party products, sometimes without even being obvious to the organisation using it," said Don Smith, vice-president of threat intelligence at cybersecurity firm Sophos' Counter Threat Unit.

Organisations should also conduct a full inventory of their systems and update PHP installations to patched versions, said Srinivas L., joint managing director and joint CEO of GSATS Cybertech. "Where a system cannot be patched immediately, put a web application firewall rule in front of it as a shield. Shadow infrastructure is the attacker's favourite address because nobody is watching it," he said. With several recent cybersecurity incidents involving autonomous AI agents or humans using frontier AI models, the threat could grow in the coming days, experts said.

"We are already seeing the broader impact of AI use in vulnerability discovery, as Patch Tuesday and other security updates are being flooded with AI-assisted flaws. AI-assisted vulnerability discovery is creating a vicious cycle, but it isn't finding more needles. These flaws are the needles," said Satnam Narang, senior staff research engineer at Tenable.

Silver inflows likely to rebound as import curbs eased for Diwali

BLOOMBERG
Mumbai, 22 October

India's silver imports are set to rebound in time for the busiest jewelry-buying season after the government issued a raft of new permits, easing restrictions that had stifled shipments to one of the world's biggest markets.

Traders and bank dealers this week received quotas covering as much as 6,000 tonnes of silver, said according to four people familiar with the matter. The permits are valid for six months, said the people, who asked not to be named because they're not allowed to speak publicly.

The new licences "should be able to easily cover any demand spike," said Harshal Barot, principal consultant at Metals Focus Ltd, a precious metals consultancy. "As a result, we no longer see a tight market and premiums are likely to ease substantially in the run-up to Diwali."

India imports almost all of its silver. The government introduced new licensing

Restrictions lifted

- Traders, bank dealers have received quotas covering as much as 6,000 tonnes of silver
- The Centre introduced licensing requirements in May as a measure to conserve FX reserves
- As a result, silver imports initially plunged to a fraction of the country's demand
- Despite demand uptick, silver consumption is expected to pale in comparison with last year requirements in May, one of a number of measures taken to preserve foreign-exchange reserves and defend the rupee.

Would-be silver buyers must now apply for a permit, and every shipment must be accompanied by a certificate proving the country of origin. The government also more than doubled import taxes on gold and silver, adding to the cost of buying.

As a result, silver imports initially plunged to a fraction of the country's demand. In June, monthly shipments hit a three-year low of just 37 tonnes. That rose to 328 tonnes in September, according to an estimate by Metals Focus, as a limited number of permits were granted.

Demand for precious metals typically rises during the festival season that peaks with Diwali. With the latest permits granted, premiums paid to secure silver are likely to ease substantially, Barot said.

Indian premiums dropped to around 50 cents an ounce over the global benchmark on Thursday, said Monal Thakkar, managing director of Ashoka Global FZCO, a precious metals trader. That was down from around $2 last week, data from Metals Focus shows.

Last year, India imported over 7,000 tonnes of silver, a massive wave of buying that helped to trigger a historic short squeeze in the global market. Prices rose further as speculators piled in — hitting a record high above $121 an ounce in January — before slumping after the West Asia war sent energy prices surging, sparking global inflation fears. Spot silver was trading around $56 an ounce on Thursday.

While demand has picked up ahead of the festival season, silver consumption is expected to pale in comparison with last year. Stocking by retailers and wholesalers has been subdued, Barot said, and fewer Indians are gifting silver this year. "We have not seen any meaningful dip-buying despite the price correction, as many investors are sitting on losses from silver bought last year," he added.
