The Most Effective Shield Against Cervical Cancer

Ahmedabad, Cervical cancer is the second most common in women in India, after breast cancer, hence it is important to educate masses about this common and preventable cancer in women. Cervical cancer is undoubtedly one of the most preventable cancers in our body and also very highly curable especially in early stages. It is caused by a sexually transmitted virus called the Human Papilloma Virus (HPV). When a woman is infected with a persistent high risk oncogenic subtype of this virus, it may lead to a precancerous state called dysplasia, which, if left untreated, can ultimately lead to cancer. Dr. Hemant B. Tongaonkar, HOD & Principal Director - Urologic & Gynecologic Oncosurgery, Nanavati Max Super Specialty Hospital said "Two important approaches to primarily prevent this cancer are vaccination against HPV infection and lifestyle modifications. The HPV vaccines are safe and highly effective, protecting more than 95% of vaccinated girls from oncogenic HPV infection and cervical precancer. Long-term studies have shown that these vaccines given to girls between the age of 9 & 14 can significantly bring down the incidence of precancerous lesions as well as cancer. (13-9)

Staying Active Through the Fast By Ritika Samaddar

Ahmedabad, The holy month of Ramadan is a time of spirituality, reflection, and community. Fasting from dawn until dusk for 30 days can feel physically demanding, especially for mothers, college students, and professionals balancing daily responsibilities. The key to maintaining steady energy throughout the day is a thoughtfully planned Sehri. The focus at Sehri should be on balanced, slow-releasing foods that help sustain energy and prevent fatigue. Nutrient-dense options help provide steady fuel and prolonged satiety. On the other hand, starting the day with fried or overly sweet foods can lead to a rapid spike and drop in energy, often leaving one feeling tired and dehydrated as the day progresses. Making mindful, nutritious choices at Sehri can make the fasting experience more comfortable and energised. Here are five foods to include for sustained energy through the day: Almonds are loaded with Vitamin B2, Vitamin E, magnesium, and phosphorus, which contribute to energy release from foods. They provide a healthy source of energy that helps you stay active. Incorporating California Almonds into your Sehri, whether soaked overnight or mixed into smoothies, can help maintain consistent energy levels during extended fasting periods.

Gujarat Sets the Pace for India's Semiconductor Future

Ahmedabad, "India Electronics and Semiconductor Association (IESA) and SEMI India congratulate the Government of Gujarat's Department of Science & Technology and the Gujarat State Electronics Mission on the successful inauguration of Gujarat SemiConnect. We commend the visionary leadership of the Government of Gujarat and the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY)/India Semiconductor Mission (ISM) for creating a progressive policy environment that is accelerating the development of a world-class semiconductor and electronics manufacturing ecosystem in the state and across India. Gujarat's forward-looking policies - including the dedicated Semiconductor Policy 2022-27, robust fiscal and non-fiscal incentives, streamlined approvals, and strategic focus on establishing 'Semicon City' at Dholera and advanced facilities at Sanand - have significantly de-risked investments and expanded opportunities beyond fabs to include OSAT/ATMP, components, PCB, design, and supply-chain partners. These efforts complement national initiatives by MeitY and the ISM that provide critical support for fabs, packaging, testing, design, and allied infrastructure. -

Why Hormuz, not Fordow, is the real centre of gravity in the Iran crisis

The current policy debate on Iran in Washington is framed as a choice between a comprehensive nuclear agreement and a calibrated military strike. This framing is incomplete. The present confrontation is better understood as the interaction of three structural forces. First are the limits of coercive diplomacy. Second is the regime-survival calculus in Tehran. Third is the systemic vulnerability of global energy flows. Once these are examined together, it becomes evident that the real spotlight is not Iran's nuclear infrastructure but the Strait of Hormuz. From the perspective of coercive diplomacy, the United States has already satisfied the condition of escalation credibility. Financial sanctions have sharply constrained Iran's access to foreign exchange, contributed to elevated inflation, and exacerbated domestic economic instability. Concurrently, Washington has deployed the largest concentration of air and naval assets in the Middle East since 2003. However, coercion requires not only credible punishment but also credible
