Sugar stocks sweeten on ethanol duty relief

E22-E30 waiver signals policy support for India's blending programme

ABHINAV RANJAN
New Delhi, 11 June

Sugar stocks were upbeat in trading on Thursday, even as broader markets remained weak amid renewed tensions in West Asia. Shares of sugar companies gained as much as 5 per cent intraday after the government decided to extend excise duty exemptions for petrol blended with higher levels of ethanol.

The move is seen as supportive of ethanol blending demand, which could benefit sugar companies. The latest decision also paves the way for the rollout of fuel grades beyond the current E20 standard, where 'E' refers to ethanol and '20' denotes a 20 per cent ethanol blend in petrol.

Among individual stocks, Dwarikesh Sugar and SBEC Sugar advanced 5 per cent each, hitting their respective upper circuits of ₹112.4 and ₹66.32. Dwarikesh Sugar Industries ended 3.4 per cent higher at ₹45.06. Triveni Engineering & Industries and Balrampur Chini Mills rose more than 2 per cent each to settle at ₹382.6 and ₹548.55, respectively. Dhampur Sugar Mills gained 1.3 per cent to close at ₹143.17. Other counters such as Dalmia Bharat Sugar & Industries, Bajaj Hindusthan Sugar, and EID Parry (India) bucked the trend to end the session in negative territory.

According to a Ministry of Finance notification, the government has removed excise duty on petrol blended with ethanol content of 22 per cent (E22), 25 per cent (E25), 27 per cent (E27), and 30 per cent (E30). This also marks the first major tax incentive for ethanol blends above E20. The decision is aimed at supporting India's ethanol blending programme, which seeks to reduce dependence on crude oil. India imports more than 85 per cent of its crude oil requirements.

Analysts said the government is keen on increasing ethanol blending due to the West Asia crisis, and any steps to increase the sourcing price of ethanol by oil-marketing companies can act as an earnings catalyst for integrated sugar millers.

Ponmudi R, chief executive officer, Enrich Money, said the excise duty waiver is a structural positive for the sugar sector as it improves long-term demand visibility for ethanol producers. Higher ethanol offtake can support sugar mill profitability, reduce dependence on volatile sugar prices, and improve cash flows through a better product mix.

Among listed players, Ponmudi said his preferred picks remain Balrampur, Triveni, and EID Parry due to their strong ethanol capacities, integrated business models, and ability to benefit from the next phase of blending growth. "While sugar export restrictions remain a near-term overhang, the market is likely to focus more on ethanol-led earnings visibility and capacity expansion opportunities over the medium term," he said.

Sunny Agrawal, head of fundamental research at SBI Securities, said the government is incentivising consumers by offering tax benefits in the form of an excise duty waiver. This clearly indicates that the government is in favour of ensuring higher ethanol consumption in the economy, and this should act as a strong industry tailwind for ethanol players.

Agrawal reiterated that Balrampur remains the top pick in the sector. "With low system inventory, sugar prices are likely to remain firm. Balrampur has the capability to produce 340-350 million litres of ethanol, and any price increase offered by the government in the upcoming tender in November 2026 can act as a major earnings swing factor for the company. In the longer run, commercialisation of the polylactic acid plant will add a higher-margin product to the company's portfolio and provide stability to earnings."

Algorithmic trading: How to participate in it?

SANJAY KUMAR SINGH & KARTHIK JEROME

Major brokers are preparing to roll out algorithmic (algo) trading strategies for retail investors over the next few months, according to a recent media report. The Securities and Exchange Board of India's (Sebi's) revised framework for participation of retail traders in algo trading has been in place since April 2026.

Understand the strategy

Understand the basic logic of the algo. "The investor should know whether the strategy is trend-following, mean-reversion, option selling or buying, intraday, positional, hedged or unhedged," says Chintan Singh Jaggi, co-founder, AlgoTest. Check its trading frequency. "High-frequency trading can raise expenses significantly," says Rajesh Ganesh, chief executive officer and founder, TripleInt Trading Systems.

Check the trading segment

The asset class in which the algo operates matters. "It affects liquidity, which has a bearing on performance," says Ganesh.

Illiquidity can lead to higher

Choose carefully

- In a white-box algo, the user knows the logic
- It is transparent
- But the logic can become widely known and vulnerable to attack
- In a black-box algo, the trading logic remains undisclosed
- Its advantage is professional design and management
- It retains uniqueness and protects intellectual property
- But the user is dependent entirely on the provider's reputation and skill slippage, non-execution of orders, execution at an unfavourable price, or inability to exit a trade. "If the instrument is illiquid, the backtest may look good but live execution results can be different because of slippage," says Jaggi. Slippage is the gap between the trigger price and the actual execution price.

Review performance history

Do not go for an algo that does not have a track record. "At least one year of backtest data should be available," says Ramakrishnan

Selvaraj, co-founder, catbots.tech. According to Jaggi, live performance results for at least six months to one year can provide additional comfort.

Live-trading results should match backtest results. "A much higher drawdown is a red flag," says Ganesh. A one-off large winning trade in a backtest can distort an algo's record. "Assess returns after accounting for such outliers," says Ganesh. A large loss should also not be overlooked.

Test across market cycles

Examine whether the strategy has been tested in varied market conditions. "It should be tested in bull, bear and sideways markets. Returns should not be based on short-term data," says Abhishek Kumar, Sebi-registered investment advisor and founder, SahajMoney.com.

Assess risk metrics

Examine the risks of a strategy, including the maximum loss sustained. Factor in peak drawdown — the maximum money the algo has lost from peak to trough. "A drawdown of more than 20 per cent becomes uncomfortable," says Ganesh.

The duration of the drawdown also matters. If an algo's drawdown continues for months, the user may lose confidence. The rapidity of a drawdown is crucial. "Sudden drawdowns are psychologically harder for retail investors to handle," says Jaggi.

Compare the expected drawdown with your risk appetite. "A statistically sound strategy may not be suitable for a person who cannot handle the expected drawdown," says Jaggi.

He emphasises that traders should check the number of trades, win rate, average profit per trade, average loss per trade, worst day, best day and monthly consistency. Risk of ruin refers to the possibility of a trader's entire capital getting wiped out. Assess whether this can happen in the strategy you are evaluating.

Costs and capital required

The algo provider or broker should display backtest results net of expenses, including the provider's fee, brokerage and taxes. "A strategy that looks good before costs may not remain attractive after costs," says Jaggi.

Evaluate capital requirement carefully. Deploy only the minimum capital you are willing to write off completely. "Get to know the algo's worst-case loss from backtesting or paper trading and hold at least that much," says Selvaraj.

Verify Sebi compliance

Algo strategies must be registered with stock exchanges. "Verify exchange registration before selecting an algo," says Kumar. He cautions that if a provider offers a black-box algo, users must check that they hold a Sebi research analyst licence.

Understand tax treatment

Intraday trading, where traders buy and sell shares on the same day without delivery, is classified as business income. "When shares are held as stock in trade and transactions are carried out with an intention to trade or make profits, the income is taxed as business income. Business income is taxed at the slab rate," says Rupali Singhania, founder, Aarete Consultants.

Buying a flat? Know the difference between carpet & super built-up areas

For most homebuyers, the size of a flat is a major factor influencing the purchase decision. But the size promoted in brochures and advertisements may not always reflect the space they can actually use.

The Uttar Pradesh Real Estate Regulatory Authority (UP RERA) has advised buyers to rely on carpet area rather than super built-up area while evaluating residential properties. The carpet area is the net usable floor space inside an apartment.

It includes:

- Bedrooms, living, and dining areas
- Kitchen
- Bathrooms
- Internal partition walls

It excludes:

- Balconies

- Verandas
- Open terraces
- Common areas of the building

Super built-up area includes the carpet area plus a proportionate share of common facilities and shared spaces.

These may include:

- Corridors
- Staircases
- Lift areas

- Lobbies, clubhouses and other common amenities

Two flats advertised with the same super built-up area can offer significantly different usable living space. Property prices are often quoted on a per-square-foot basis. If buyers focus on the advertised super built-up area, they may assume they are getting more living space than is actually available.
